I found the 2017 La Mata, one of the two single-vineyard bottlings, quite marked by the toast of the barrels, and at the same time, it came through as quite ripe and a little heady, voluptuous and somehow baroque. It matured in brand-new 228-liter French oak barrels for 20 months, and right now comes through as very tannic and oaky and without the balance of the previous vintage. I have doubts about it, and if it's able to digest all that wood, my score might be conservative... 528 bottles, 25 magnums and 8 Jeroboams were filled in June 2019.
